

ABSTRACT

[0046] A device, system and method for scanning channels on a wireless network. A device receives packets or other information for a channel and determines, from the received packets information regarding the channel. If the information indicates the channel is not desirable, before an informational packet (e.g., a beacon frame) is received, the device switches to a different channel for scanning.